

The Band

Psychopatico

The Mad Days Tour had included recording tracks for a live album. For a band notoriously known as an outstanding live band it seemed somewhat strange that D:A:D had never released a live album – with the exception of Osaka After Dark for the Japanese market only. Finally they seemed to have recordings good enough to remedy that.

The band selected tracks for the album in August and September, and with the help of Paul Northfield, who produced Helpyourselfish from 1995, the mix was made in October. The result was 17 live tracks on a two-CD album, which was named Psychopatico, packaged in a colorful cover of live photos, and released November 18, 1998. The album also included a brand new track called Jacketless in December and live videos to the tracks Bad Craziiness and Cloudy Hours.

Meanwhile, what only few people knew at the time was that an important decision was only waiting to be made public...